400 Frosh Overlooked After Game!

There were numerous parties for uppers that night, but what parties could the freshmen attend? After 10:30 p.m., all lowerclassmen were kicked out. The answer is nothing. Freshmen, who were not allowed to participate in the after-game that afternoon are sitting in their dorm rooms watching the "victory parties" or walking around the campus listening to the music coming from the fraternity houses.

Post-game festivities such as tearing the goalpost down and parading a "victory parade" or walking around the campus listening to the "victory parties" or walking around the campus listening to the music coming from the fraternity houses.

Overlooked: What parties could the freshmen attend? What was arranged for them to do after the final whistle blew.

Watching TV or Studying: There was little else for the freshmen to do but walk around campus and listen to upperclassmen "whooping it up" at the parties.

The goalpost down: Lafayette's last-minute victory over Muhlenberg on the home gridiron Saturday.

There will be another mixer held for Lafayette freshmen next Saturday. Also present at this mixer will be all interested students or faculty advisors.

The appreciation audience acknowledged the effort of the students and professors who made this possible. A large group of students and professors attended the mixer.

“Gee, the old house has hardly changed in twenty years,” said one of the tourists last week end while visiting his fraternity as part of the annual pilgrimage to the first home of the fraternity. It was indeed a sight to behold. I realized how true his comment was, inter­viewing another him. As civil education is still going on, and higher education is constantly evolving to meet the challenges of a modern society, the fraternity system, in large part, remains static, unchanged, and unwilling to change. But wait! Before you label us anti-­fraternity—an ethic so often applied to this newspaper unjustly—read and consider what we have to say about a very real problem which eventually spell not for the college, nor its students, but for the fraternity system itself, a system which has and can always be of real collegiate value.

How many of us—here at Lafayette—have not noticed the increasing number of individuals who are concerned with the fraternity system? Are we, as fraternity men, therefore, faced with a growing sense of discomfort and dis­content among the older generation which has always been part of our history?

The answer is possibly both. Yet the question is more than that. For there is a larger group of people who have been—and who have no longer be­long to any fraternity. These are the men who are interested in the fraternity system, who have left it, and who are not likely to return to it. They are the men who have seen the fraternity system in many ways a more mature group than those of twenty years ago. They have seen the change from the upperclassmen in the college to the fraternity men, and they have seen the change in the climate of the college.

It is true that the fraternity system has changed, and that the men who belong to it now are different from the men who belonged to it in the past. Yet it is also true that the fraternity system has remained static, and that the men who belong to it now are not likely to change. The problem is not one of change, but of non-change. The problem is one of the need for change, or of the need to remain static.

The philosophy of the fraternity system is that it should remain static, and that the men who belong to it should remain static. The problem is not one of change, but of non-change. The problem is one of the need for change, or of the need to remain static.

We have been told that we, as American students, should take some of the responsibility for our own actions. We should not expect our parents to take care of us, or to always provide for us. We should be responsible for our own future, and for our own decisions.

As we are faced with the responsibility of making our own decisions, we are also faced with the responsibility of being able to speak. We should be able to speak our minds, and to be able to listen to the minds of others. We should be able to understand, and to be able to be understood.

Freedom is an inherent right of all people, and it is our duty to preserve it. We should be able to speak, and to be able to listen to the minds of others. We should be able to understand, and to be able to be understood.

The pledge you save may be your own

Today's column is directed at those young female under­graduates and their boy friends. We are aware that this is a very diffi­cult period of life for both of them, and we are aware that there are a lot of problems that arise during this time.

First, let us take up the matter of housemates. This housemate is your friend, your guide, your mentor. You should treat her with respect. When you wish to speak to her, do so in a way that shows her that you respect her. You should not treat her as if she were your servant.

Second, let us take up the matter of laundry. Never hang your wash on the front porch of the su­permarket. This is a very unhygienic thing to do.

Third, let us take up the matter of dating. We must always remember that shopping and preparing meals for a household is not all that is involved. Your boyfriend may do a lot of work, but don't take that for granted. Your boyfriend may do a lot of work, but don't take that for granted.

Fourth, clothing. Never forget that your appearance re­flects on your character and your personality. Be careful of your appearance. Don't beat about the bush; ask him point-blank, "Are you an acceptable fellow?"

Finally, let us take up the matter of personal hygiene. We are asked to remain clean and to keep our personal hygiene in order. We are asked to remain clean and to keep our personal hygiene in order.

WELSH CHOIR — The Players Incorporated production of "The Oresteia" of Aeschylus will open on Oct. 12, with Dr. James L. Dykes, head of Lafayette's English department, as director. Two performances will be given Oct. 12 and 13 in the college's general assembly auditorium. Dr. Rogers noted that both he and the students are looking forward to it.
